Balfour Beatty Communities LifeWorks Coordinator Amy Adams Visits the Pentagon to Discuss Importance of Community Programs for Military Families

LifeWorks@Balfour Beatty Communities® program enriches the lives of residents living in privatized military housing

Newtown Square, Pa — October 20, 2011 — Standing up and presenting in front of a room of people is never easy, especially when your audience is top Air Force officials. AS a LifeWorks Coordinator for Balfour Beatty Communities, LLC, Amy Adams recently did just that, when she visited the Pentagon for a Program Management Review of Housing Privatization where she presented to an audience of top Air Force representatives about the importance of community programs in improving the quality of life for military families at bases across the country.

Ms. Adams manages the LifeWorks @ Balfour Beatty Communities® program at Travis Air Force Base. LifeWorks @ Balfour Beatty Communities® is a unique wellness program provided at all of Balfour Beatty Communities' military housing installations to help residents and their families develop and maintain healthy bodies and minds. In her role, Ms. Adams runs a variety of activities, seminars, and events to help enrich the lives of residents living on base.

“Every day I’m inspired by our residents and it was an honor to show the heart of what we do to the people that can help us to keep it beating, because our military families deserve it,” said Adams. “This was a once in a lifetime opportunity to show not only the amazing things we have accomplished, but also how important it is to have this type of program in all military communities.”

Colonel Frank Freeman III, Chief, Housing Division, DCS/Logistics, Installations & Mission Support, expressed his appreciation to Ms. Adams and all the employees of Balfour Beatty Communities for their continued support of Air Force communities and “the absolutely superb initiatives that Balfour Beatty is doing for military members and their families throughout our Air Force.”

As one of the leading Public-Private Partnership (PPP or P3) providers of housing, lifestyle and community solutions for members of the U.S. military and their families, Balfour Beatty Communities, through its LifeWorks @ Balfour Beatty Communities® program, contributes to the sense of community and well-being of residents across the country.

“As an Air Force veteran herself, Amy is a passionate advocate for building strong partnerships and programs that enhance the quality of life for military families living on base all over the U.S.,” said John Schaaf, Regional Vice President of Balfour Beatty Communities. “She recognizes that relationships are at the core of what makes these programs unique and meaningful for every base, and she does an amazing job of not only communicating the importance of these initiatives, but making them a reality for our residents.”
